Isabelle Attané (INED), Didier Breton (University of Strasbourg), Olivia Ekert-Jaffé (INED), Cécile Lefèvre (University Paris-V), Godelieve Masuy-Stroobant (University of Louvain-la-Neuve), Wilfried Rault (INED), Arnaud Régnier-Loilier (INED), Claudine Sauvain-Dugerdil (University of Geneva).

This book series is devoted to publications of international relevance in population studies and demography as promoted by the French National Institute for Demographic Studies (INED, Paris). As one social science among many, demography is interlinked with related disciplines including sociology, anthropology, history and linguistics, and continuously explores its boundaries with neighbouring disciplines, ranging from epidemiology and biology to economics. The studies published in the series are based on solid empirical research and firm methodological foundations. Particular attention is paid to long-term and collaborative surveys. Guided by its distinguished Editorial Advisory Board, the INED series aims to provide international visibility to works of high academic standard recognized in the French-speaking scientific community. The series supports an internationally acknowledged style of demographic research, championed by INED for more than half a century and rekindled in such fields as the study of demographic situations around the world; the relationship between demographic conditions and development; international comparisons; migration, identities and territories; family studies; gender studies and sexuality; ageing, health and mortality; trajectories, mobility and social networks.

Acknowledgements

I would like to thank the many people who helped me with the organization of the GGS survey in France, in particular Aline Désesquelles and Cécile Lefèvre who assisted me during the first wave, and with the preparation of this collective work: INED's publications department, headed by Dominique Paris; the editorial board for INED collections, under the direction of Jean-Marc Rohrbasser; Marion Maudet for her helpful re-reading; Isabelle Brianchon for her meticulous work on the figures, and, of course, Catriona Dutreuilh, who organized and oversaw the translation of the whole book into English.

My thanks also go to the approximately 10,000 participants in the survey, without whose stories these studies could not exist, and the researchers who were able to transform this input into findings.

The first wave of the French ERFI-GGS survey was funded by (in alphabetical order):

- the Agence nationale de la recherche (ANR) (project ANR-05-BLAN-0361-01),
- the Caisse nationale d'assurance vieillesse (CNAV),
- the Caisse nationale des allocations familiales (CNAF),
- the Conseil d'orientation des retraites (COR),
- the Direction de la recherche, des études, de l'évaluation et des statistiques (DREES),
- the Direction de l'animation de la recherche, des études et des statistiques (DARES),
- the Institut national d'études démographiques (INED),
- the Institut national de la statistique et des études économiques (INSEE).
