Samir K.C

Samir K.C., research scholar, International Institute for Applied Systems Analysis (IIASA)

Sanchez, Magaly

Magaly Sanchez-R is currently a Senior Researcher and Scholar at the Office of Population Research, at Princeton University. She has been Professor of Urban Sociology at the Institute of Urbanism at the Universidad Central de Venezuela. (1976-2001) after completing her Doctoral degree at the EPHS (1981). Her research in Latin America has documented urban poverty, problems in the barrios; the social exclusion of poor urban youth and street children; and traced the consequences in terms of a growing radicalization of youth gangs and their increasing acceptance of extreme violence. She continues to work in topics related to the Urban Violence, and the power of the Criminal Perverse Economy in Latin American countries, as well as the consequences of Structural adjustments in recent decades. Recently, Professor Sanchez has studied International Migration to the United States, with special interest in the construction of Latino Identities. Lastly, she is advancing research on International Migration of Talent in particular from Venezuela and other South American countries.

Sánchez-Soto, Gabriela

Gabriela Sánchez-Soto is a Ph.D. Candidate in Sociology at Brown University where she is also affiliated with the Population Studies and Training Center. The core of his research interests is the study of migration, particularly in the Latin American context. These interests include the demographic, social and economic effects of migration in sending communities in the developing world. Her dissertation studies the impact of U.S. migration on the educational attainment and educational mobility of youth in Mexico. More specifically, she examines the determinants of schooling achievements and the influences of parents, family and community on youth's outcomes. Other research includes changes in demographic dynamics related to migration; the intertwining of migration and life course decisions –such as union and family formation and the transition to adulthood; as well as the effects of remittances in household and community well being.

Sander, Nikola

Nikola Sander, Post-doctoral research scholar, Vienna Institute of Demography. Nikola Sander recently completed her PhD at the University of Queensland, Australia. Her dissertation entitled 'Retirement Migration of the Baby Boomers in Australia: Beach, Bush or Busted?' investigates the dynamics, determinants and consequences of retirement migration. Ms Sander received a Masters in Geography from the Eberhard-Karls Universität in Tübingen, Germany. Her research focuses on population mobility, migration, quantitative methods incl. population projections, and spatial modelling of population dynamics.
